

Giveaway – Finding Lost Puppies with Eva

Eva enjoys playing games. We have many games for her age and many for us. The one thing about every game that we have is that there is a winner and one or more losers. Sure, I loved playing monopoly and crushing the other players but that is certainly the type of game that can end in a fistfight or even begin with one. I don't think I'd heard of a cooperative board game before. Luckily, game play has evolved.

Eva and I spent the late morning playing quite a few rounds of Lost Puppies. Lost Puppies is a cooperative game from Peaceable Kingdom. Game play is pretty simple but with enough twists that the outcome is not set in stone. Players either win as a group or lose as a group. Eva picked it up really quickly, all except for the fact that after you use certain pieces they are no longer in play.

Players try to get six lost puppies back to their homes before dark. There are cards that block the puppies from getting home and there are some that help the puppies. Players can share game pieces and work together to get the puppies home. We played a number of times and lost the game only once. When Allison came home we played together as a family and it was one of the most enjoyable family game play that we've had in some time.

Peaceable Kingdom has five new games that are now in stores. And I've got the opportunity to give one of those great games away to one lucky reader (Reader's Choice).
